CHAIN OF FRIENDSHIP WITH THE IROQUOIS NATION

On June 22, 2010, Timothy J. Shannon, author of Iroquois Diplomacy on the Early American Frontier (2008), and professor of history at Gettysburg College, presented a Signature Series lecture to Pennsylvania Heritage Society (PHS) members and guests at The State Museum of Pennsylvania, Harrisburg, followed by a reception.

Dr. Shannon's talk, "Pennsylvania's Chain of Friendship with the Iroquois Nation," discussed Pennsylvania's reputation as a "peaceable kingdom" during which Indians and colonists lived together in cooperation and friendship rather than fear and hatred. The lecture examined Pennsylvania's long diplomatic partnership with its most powerful Indian neighbors, the Iroquois Confederacy of New York, and its impact on the colonial and native peoples of Penn's colony.

The lecture was supported by a Teaching American History grant to the Central Susquehanna Intermediate Unit from the United States Department of Education.

Keystones of the FEDERAL UNION

The Heritage Society and the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission hosted thirty-one teachers from ten school districts in central Pennsylvania for the 2010 teacher institute held June 21–25. During three days in Harrisburg, the teachers worked with Kurt W. Carr, senior curator of archaeology at The State Museum; Barry C. Kent, retired museum curator of archaeology; and Cherie H. Trimble, museum educator. On June 22, PHS members joined the teachers for an interesting lecture on Pennsylvania's diplomacy with the Iroquois Nation by Dr. Timothy Shannon of Gettysburg College. The teachers spent a day touring the Oley Valley in Berks County exploring the religious and ethnic diversity of early Pennsylvania's colonists with James A. Lewars, site administrator of Landis Valley Museum. Diane Nadler, museum educator at Pennsbury Manor, and her staff led the teachers in a hands-on workshop on June 25.
